Geography prof to receive award

Dr. Colin Laroque, a Geography and Environment professor, is this year's winner of the Herbert and Leota Tucker Teaching Award at Mount Allison University. It will be presented during spring Convocation ceremonies on May 16. The Tucker Teaching Award recognizes the accomplishments of professors who exemplify not only outstanding teaching, but also educational leadership and a scholarly approach to teaching.

In classes such as Weather and Climate, Physical Environment, Geomorphology, and Field Methods, he conducts outdoor labs and fieldwork whenever possible, giving his students 'real-life' research experience.

Laroque's students have had the opportunity to learn and work outside both on campus and across the country, with field classes and research projects taking place in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Labrador, Alberta, and Saskatchewan.
